Professor Chung Lee

Course description:
This course will investigate the characteristics of developing countries, theories of economic growth, and strategies for economic development. In doing so it will compare the successful experiences of Asia’s Newly Industrializing Economies with the less successful experiences of many other developing countries, questioning why some countries succeed in achieving rapid economic growth while others fail to do so. Some of the specific topics covered in the course are savings and investment, international trade and investment, globalization, human resources, and institutions.

The course requirements are two mid-term exams and the final. Students are expected to actively participate in classroom discussion.

(Prerequisites: Econ 300 and 301, or consent.)
